

Derek A. Dyson is the CEO/President of Today's Power, Inc. (TPI). Mr. Dyson leads a team in developing renewable energy projects domestically and abroad. With over 210MW installed to support small, rural and low-income communities, TPI has become a model for sustainable development for underserved communities. With over 100 projects installed ranging from 100KW to 72MW of solar, battery storage, EV Infrastructure, TPI recognizes the importance of meeting the needs of the communities and customers it serves.

A former shareholder for over 20 years with the law firm of Duncan, Weinberg, Genzer & Pembroke, P.C., he has worked closely in developing and implementing energy solutions for governments, cooperatives, municipalities, tribal communities, and independent developers. He has worked on financing, developing, constructing, operating, and decommissioning numerous energy projects across the United States and Internationally. He has been a contracting officer with both the Department of Navy and the White House Situation Support Staff and a law clerk with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Mr. Dyson is an author on topics related to energy development and regulation, as well as presented extensively on such topics both domestically and internationally.